ABOUT ME

I am an educator and researcher with a strong background in teacher education, curriculum change, and assessment. Holding an M.Phil in Education, I have conducted and published research on students self-assessment on their critical thinking, service-learning on communication skills development, and influence of address gender on spoken fluency among EFL learners. My professional experience spans teaching at both government and private schools, as well as working in assessment and evaluation. I am committed to enhancing educational practices through evidence-based approaches and effective training.
